- Genuine and passionate
- Great speaker, would have been good to hear from local experts as well
- Highly engaging and modelled the principles of UDL. Managed the in person and online audience brilliantly so that everyone was included and participated.
- I really liked the first session, the second one, the workshop, I felt the speaker ignored all the work that UCD has been doing to foster UDL for all this years.
- It was a very solid introduction to UDL and its application. The presentation also modelled exemplar inclusivity skills.

- It was an excellent presentation, and very inspiring but perhaps a bit idealistic in terms of zoom/videos, etc. promoting engagement
- It was inspiring and reinforced my enthusiasm for UDL and making the learning environment accessible for all.
- Lively and illuminating
- Practical and engaging
- Really great -- and so well-paced. I was following it online and was so impressed how he included us
- Really inspiring and insightful
- This was an excellent keynote. Engaging and very informative.
- Thomas is solid, but I feel trying to do the online/people in the room sometimes means it gets a bit weird. Also, I think for a keynote, we come for a solid session, not one with lots of Q&A.
- Thomas was phenomenal. He didn't talk the talk - he absolutely walked the walk. His keynote was full of UDL and he was an incredibly honest and engaging speaker who wooed the audience. He actively listened to what we had to say while winning us over to what he had to say.
- Thought provoking and very inclusive of both the online and in-person audiences.
- Very engaging
- Very entertaining but I'm not sure I learned much
- Very good to excellent - hard to talk for 1 hour on this topic
- Very insightful
- Very inspiring
- Very interesting keynote speech
- Very lively speaker but didn't say much more than we had at other sessions. Good at dealing with hybrid event
- Well considered
- Wonderful. Loved the interactive approach & the practicality of the information; made UDL 'do-able'.
